Get Ready to Vote in the Special Election on March 4

Referendum on the potential sale of the Waukee Municipal Gas Utility

City Council approved holding a Special Election on March 4, 2025, regarding the future of the Waukee Municipal Gas Utility. This City-owned utility provides natural gas to homes and businesses in Waukee. At the election, Waukee voters will determine if the City should put the gas utility up for sale to another utility provider.

Why is this question up to voters?

In recent years, the Mayor and City Council have heard concerns about the cost of natural gas in Waukee compared to neighboring communities. The City Council made some changes in recent years that helped a little, but gas rates are still higher than in neighboring cities. The council has also looked at the risks associated with managing a municipal utility, like how fast Waukee is growing, increasingly unpredictable winter weather and changes in the gas market here in the U.S. and around the world. After extensive review of the long-term viability of the utility and its costs to the City, the Waukee City Council decided to bring the possibility of selling the gas utility to voters.

What happens if it passes?

If more than 50% of voters in the special election vote in favor, the City Council can consider offers from other utility companies that want to buy the Waukee Municipal Gas Utility. The Council would evaluate proposals and try to find the best deal for Waukee. If they can't negotiate a deal that is in the best interest of gas customers, the council can decide not to sell the gas utility. If the voters approve the referendum and City Council approves the terms of a sale, the Iowa Utilities Commission would also need to approve the sale. If it does not pass, the City will continue to own and operate the gas utility.
